Gary Paul Green is a professor in the Department of Community & Environmental Sociology at the University of Wisconsin-Madison and a community development specialist in the Center for Community & Economic Development at the University of Wisconsin-Extension. Green received his Ph.D. from the University of Missouri-Columbia. His research, teaching, and outreach at the University of Wisconsin has focused on community, workforce and economic development issues. He is author of Finance Capital and Uneven Development (Westview Press), Asset Building and Community Development (Sage Publications) and Workforce Development Networks in Rural Areas: Building the High Road (Edward Elgar Publishing) and a co-editor of Amenities and Rural Development: Theory, Methods and Public Policy (Edward Elgar Publishing). He has served as an advisor on community development issues in New Zealand, South Korea, Uganda and Ukraine.

Needed this book for my Community Development class. It's easy and convenient to read on Kindle.I used to purchase paperback or hardcover books for school, then resell them. Now, I simply download it to Kindle.

Textbook was received but the conditions of it were not the best. Unit had a lot of wear and tear.

I enjoyed this book because it covers the basics thoroughly. Key concepts are highlighted and examples given to cement them into your brain! There's a lot of resources given to cross-reference online as well. Happy with it.

Just as described! Thank you!!

Exactly as advertised. Very Satisfied with the product!

What can I say it's a book for college

Purchased for a textbook and it serves that purpose well. A fine addition to any library that includes issues on Community Development.

The book introduces the reader to some key concepts. It is well organized and well written. It is a nice reference for profesionals working in development
