further indulging and satisfying his passion for steelhead fly fishing on the Clearwater, Grand Ronde, and Snake Rivers. Drew Stoecklein's early years in Sun Valley, Idaho fueled his passion for the outdoors and photography. During his years at Brooks he studied with legendary Hollywood photographer Douglas Kirkland and world-famous wildlife photographer Dan Cox. Today he lives in Salt Lake City, Utah, where he continues his career as a professional photographer and big mountain skier.

Very nice book with some beautiful pictures. It will make a great gift to anyone who loves steelhead fishing. One star minus only because i think that for the time and effort spent the pictures are lacking and sometimes you get a feeling that some photos are in the book just so they fill the real estate, but regardless it would not stop me from buying it. This book is not remotely close to "Passion for steelhead", but it is also different in its nature. Great buy!

I bought this book on recommendation of a friend who had just moved to Idaho. I'm making flight arrangements for Idaho and the Clear Water River as we speak! Yes, steelhead flyfishing is a disease, and I am one of the infirmed! Run for your life!

Awesome photography. I read it a few times a year, especially when the Steelhead aren't running.

Great Coffee Table book. Has amazing photos, and is very well done. Book is well made and should give the reader years of use and enjoyment.

I borrowed this book from the library, its more of a picture book with some short storys in it, its a good read and really interesting book, i highly recommend it for any fly fisher man or woman who are interested in knowing more about steelhead fly fishing.
